Lisa is the founder and publisher of One Thousand Trees, offering writing, editing, publishing, and mentoring services. Since October 2021, One Thousand Trees has also published an online magazine, entitled Stories, which provides a platform for writers and poets to share their work. Branches of One Thousand Trees include Saplings (children's publishing) and Sharing (anthologies of empowerment stories).

Lisa received a BA in English from York University in 1988, and subsequently worked as an editor for a Toronto-based publishing firm for over fifteen years. She has had essays and articles published in a variety of online and print magazines, but more recently, she discovered her passion for helping others to tell their stories and speak their truth as a means to empowerment. She was honoured as one of the Guelph Y's Women of Distinction in 2018 as a Community Builder.

Lisa is the mother of one daughter, and Nana to one grandson and two granddaughters, with another on the way!
